DOG CAUSES RUNAWAY.
Horse of Miss Jeanette Gay Bitten by Canine—Young Lady Slightly Injured.

A small dog, the property of Robert Long, was the cause of a run-away on LaPorte street Wednesday evening, which resulted in wrecking the new buggy to which the horse was hitched and slightly injuring the driver, Miss Jeanette Gay, a teacher at Brightside.

Miss Gay was driving the horse, which belongs to her brother, south on Center street Wednesday evening, when a dog ran out and bit the horse's heels. The horse is young and spirited and at once started to run away. It turned east on LaPorte street, swinging the buggy across the pavement.

The buggy struck a telephone pole in front of Vogel's saloon. Miss Gay was thrown against the pole, and was badly bruised about the eyes and face. The shafts and one front wheel of the buggy were broken by the collision, and the horse broke loose from the buggy, continuing down the street, to a livery barn. The buggy was badly damaged, but the accident might have resulted more seriously for Miss Gay had the buggy upset.

The Independence Party Here.
James M. Zion, the apple king of Indiana, who is the Independence candidate for governor, is touring the state accompanied by Hon. C. E. Wendell, of Chicago. They arrived in Plymouth Wednesday afternoon and addressed the people on Michigan street. Mr. Zion spoke only seven minutes and then introduced Wendell, who is a regular buzz saw. He declared that there was no difference between Democrats and Republicans so far as government was concerned. He said both the old parties were owned by Wall street and the Standard Oil company, and the dirty stream of politics could never be purified until both old parties were wiped out of existence and a new party placed in power. He said that the Independence party platform showed the way to government by the people and must eventually succeed, therefore everybody should vote for Higen for president and Zion for governor.

DESTRUCTION OF TREES OF INDIANA THREATENS TO DRY UP THE LAKES

W. M. Herschel, an Indiana journalist, brings home to the people of Indiana, the fact that Indiana is becoming dry; that the lakes and streams are drying up, and that the condition confronting Indiana people is indeed a serious one.

On this subject he says: "The lakes, rivers and creeks of Indiana also point to trouble ahead for the water supply of the state. When LaSalle, in 1678, crossed what was to be the future state of Indiana in his search for the great Mississippi, he found scores of beautiful lakes in northern Indiana. They seemed to be connected by channels and he was compelled to make but few portages. Were LaSalle to cross the state by the same route now he would find many of the lakes gone and in their place cornfields or great patches of marsh hay. These lakes have either dried up through lack of feed from springs or have been drained by man. In the northwestern part of Morgan county, between the towns of Montevia, Hall, and Eminence, there is a vast tract that is known today as 'the lake country.' Farmers living there, when asked where their homes are, always say 'in the lake.' Forty years ago a lake five miles wide and more than twelve miles long existed there. It has been drained and now is a sea of cornfields yielding great crops. The land, although ten or twelve miles from a railroad, is worth $125 to $150 an acre. Although the drought affected corn throughout Indiana, the 'lake country' cornfields bore good crops. Second crops of clover are growing there now. Not a sign of the once vast sheet of water remains, although there are boys in their teens who remember seeing the last small pools of the once large body of water."

"W. T. Blythe, chief of the weather bureau, says that it has been only ten or twelve years since the Wabash river as a feeder of the Ohio, was a trouble maker. In 1894 Mr. Blythe was stationed at Cairo and had to make river reports."

"In those days the Wabash was responsible for much of our worry," said Mr. Blythe, in discussing present and past conditions along the rivers. "When the Ohio and the Mississippi were receding after a flood we always had to wait four or five days longer for the Wabash to get through running out than for any other stream. The Wabash and White river, its chief feeder, kept the Ohio up because they were so slow in running out and it could easily be traced to the fact that the Wabash and White rivers had well wooded shores and consequently held the water longer. Now the Wabash empties in a hurry and you have only to go along its banks to find the reason why. The water-retaining forests are gone. The Wabash has lost its old reputation among river men and the state is paying the penalty of lost forests by losing the water that used to be retained in the ground. The great good done the farms by the slow running out of the water can not be figured in dollars and cents. It would require too much arithmetic. The farmers will never realize just how much they have lost in moisture until they restore the forests, in part at least."

"The state board of forestry is urging the farmers of Indiana to set out trees in the unused ground on their farms. There are thousands of acres lying idle on Indiana farms today that should be at work helping man to replace that which he so ruthlessly swept away—the Indiana forests. Hundreds of farmers are heeding the call for tree planting and are getting good results. The effort means much to the future of the State—it means water!"

"Unless the partial restoration of the forests begins at once it will be only a question of a few years, the scientists say, until the Indiana legislature will be compelled to take control of the watersheds along the White and Wabash rivers and other streams and prevent the pollution of the streams so that the water supply of the people of the state may be drawn therefrom. This will mean the building, too, of reservoirs and dams. The time may come when Indianapolis will have to tap Lake Michigan for its water supply. That the underground supply is fast waning can not be denied. There is too much indisputable evidence of it. And when it is wholly gone, then the people must turn to the neglected streams. Indianapolis has long ago ceased to depend on wells."

OFFICIALS' TRAIN HERE.
Special Passed Through This City West-Bound Early Wednesday Morning.

Tuesday and Wednesday local employees of the Pennsylvania railroad company worked with a tension on the nerves, the occasion being the visitation of President James McCreca and other officials on an inspection tour. The train passed through Plymouth Wednesday morning, west-bound. It was the first inspection trip President McCreca had made of the lines since his elevation to the presidency.

On the train were two Fort Wayne men, Engineer W. H. Gates and Fireman J. E. Hoog. John Walsh, of Chicago, was the conductor. It is considered a great honor among trainmen to be chosen to have charge of the run of the president's special and the choice is taken as the highest tribute to the ability and faithfulness of the men. Engine No. 7476, one of the best locomotives assigned to the Fort Wayne-Chicago division, hauled the special all the way from Crete-line to Chicago.

FAKIR CAUGHT AT PERU.
Man Posed as Doctor from Chicago Told Ladies That They Had Appendicitis.

Sheriff Volpert of Peru arrested a fakir giving his name as Dr. Harry M. Perry, who has been traveling through the western part of the county, stopping at farm houses and passing himself off as an appendicitis specialist. He claimed to have permanent headquarters on North Clark street, Chicago, and would frighten women into the belief that they were suffering from an attack of appendicitis, in cases where the men of the house were not present. At a house where he found the men present he posed as a leather renovator, a carpet cleaner or fruit tree agent. He told at least a dozen ladies that they were subject to appendicitis and asking permission to take the case in hand. Several ladies got "next" to the fellow and telephoned to the sheriff.

Will Vote to Amend the Present Fish and Game Laws Which He Considers Oppressive.

In contrast to the Democratic nominee for Representative of Marshall county, Wm. L. Sarber, who has placed himself on record as being in favor of repealing the county local option law, passed by the recent session of the legislature, is the following statement of Republican candidate Dr. Chas. A. Brown:

To the Voters of Marshall County:
I desire to say to the voters of Marshall county, that if elected to the State Legislature I will vote and work to maintain the county local option law, passed by the called session of the State Legislature. I consider the people are thoroughly capable of choosing what they most desire concerning the liquor traffic, as well as all other questions coming before them to vote upon. And all good citizens of a democracy, be they Republican or Democrat should desire the majority to rule. The majority of the legal voters, by the Australian ballot settle all political questions, and I think they should settle all other questions that concern the public welfare.
